

MR PETER BARTHOLOMEW

Mr Peter Bartholomew, MC, fifth generation head of the Scottish publishers and printers of maps and atlases, John Bartholomew & Son, Ltd., died yesterday at the age of 62.

Peter Hugh Bartholomew was born at Edinburgh on November 7, 1924, and educated at Edinburgh Academy. He played rugby for his school and, later, for London Scottish. Then, in 1943, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards, going on to attain the rank of major, and win an MC for action in northern Italy.

After the war he returned to Edinburgh where he qualified as a chartered accountant. He then worked for a time in London; but he returned in 1956 to take up the reins of the family business, succeeding as chairman his father, John Bartholomew, the cartographer.

He took more of an interest in the financial side of things than in the map making. Ever since his forties he had been bedevilled by ill health, and as a result took an increasingly less active role in the company. Nevertheless, he steadfastly refused to let this curtail a wide range of business and social activities.

Most notable of these was, perhaps, his membership of The Royal Company of Archers, The Queen's Bodyguard for Scotland. Not all members of this distinguished body avail themselves of the opportunity given them to perfect this ancient art; not so Bartholomew. He became a skilled archer, not least with the long bow, and he several times won the Queen's Prize for Archery.

He retired formally from the chairmanship in 1984, and the company is no longer in the hands of the Bartholomew family.

Bartholomew was a sympathetic and approachable man whether he was addressing royalty or the most humble employee. He died in his office during one of his many return visits.

He is survived by his wife, Sheila, and by their two sons.

THE TIMES, 24th October, 1987

Mr Peter Bartholomew

Mr Peter Bartholomew, MC, fifth generation head of the Scottish publishers and printers of maps and atlases, John Bartholomew & Son, Ltd., died yesterday at the age of 62.

Peter Hugh Bartholomew was born at Edinburgh on November 7, 1924, and educated at Edinburgh Academy. He played rugby for his school and, later, for London Scottish. Then, in 1943, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards, going on to attain the rank of major, and win an MC for action in northern Italy.

After the war he returned to Edinburgh where he qualified as a chartered accountant. He then worked for a time in London; but he returned in 1956 to take up the reins of the family business, succeeding as chairman his father, John Bartholomew, the cartographer.

He took more of an interest in the financial side of things than in the map making. Ever since his forties he had been bedevilled by ill health, and as a result took an increasingly less active role in the company. Nevertheless, he steadfastly refused to let this curtail a wide range of business and social activities.

Most notable of these was, perhaps, his membership of The Royal Company of Archers, The Queen's Bodyguard for Scotland. Not all members of this distinguished body avail themselves of the opportunity given them to perfect this ancient art; not so Bartholomew. He became a skilled archer, not least with the long bow, and he several times won the Queen's Prize for Archery.

He retired formally from the chairmanship in 1984, and the company is no longer in the hands of the Bartholomew family.

Bartholomew was a sympathetic and approachable man whether he was addressing royalty or the most humble employee. He died in his office during one of his many return visits.

He is survived by his wife, Sheila, and by their two sons-